I've been working on projects, editing RAW files for years now, and with Lightroom 4 I found it very easy to edit and manipulate the colors in the RAW file without going into Photoshop/Adobe Camera Raw. With Lightroom 5, it's a little more challenging. It makes me wonder how I used to work without Adobe Camera Raw before the release of Lightroom 5. I do believe Lightroom 5 is easier to use. I believe it's more intuitive, but that's just my assumption. The workflow still isn't as straightforward and intuitive as it was with Lightroom 4, so you still have to spend additional time in order to get used to it. I do believe, however, that a lot of the new features are very intuitive and easy to use. I find replacing the image in the Project panel to be much easier in Lightroom 5 than in Lightroom 4. And the color adjustment brush in Lightroom 5 seems easy to use. It would have been nice if they had kept the Hotkeys the same in Lightroom 5, but of course they didn't, especially the color button one. After all, this is a new version, so why should I expect the user interface to be the same? The new Hotkey is always nice and, in my opinion, it should be available as a preference choice in Lightroom 4 when it's upgraded to Lightroom 5. It's one of the things that I miss most of Lightroom 4, but it's understandable that they would do that. However, Adobe did add some nice tools to Lightroom 5, such as the ability to add a Simulated Hourglass effect to the image in the image panel to create a creative look. It's very nice. Then there is the ability to show thumbnail previews of Live View images if you don't want to navigate all the way to the Project panel to view them. It's a nice feature.
