Arrays (or strip) inductors are used for various purposes, for example, in a resonator and a filter of a radio communication apparatus or a power amplifier of a radio communication apparatus. Typically, in an array inductor, two arrays of multiple turns of conductor wires are used as a single coil, and the lengths of the two arrays are equal. These arrays are wound in parallel to one another and are electrically coupled to one another. In a conventional technique, the degree of accuracy of the lengths of the arrays is reduced to less than an allowable tolerance during manufacturing, and hence a degree of accuracy of a calculated inductance is also reduced. Thus, it is difficult to achieve an inductor with a small variation in inductance. Further, there is an increase in the number of components,
